

Life Changes, So Should Your Will

"The best way to predict your future is to create it." — Peter Drucker

While we cannot predict everything that the future may bring, we can take steps to plan for it. Your will is an important part of that planning and should evolve as your life circumstances change.

As a good practice, you should review your will every 3–5 years and revisit it immediately following any major life event.

Some common reasons to review or update a will include:

Marriage, divorce, or entering a new long-term relationship

Birth or adoption of children or grandchildren

Death of a beneficiary, executor, or guardian

Major changes in assets or financial circumstances

Moving to another country

Changes in personal wishes or family relationships

Although an older will is usually still legally valid if it was properly executed, it may no longer reflect your intentions, family circumstances, or current legal realities.
